king's right to rule, once thought to be Godgiven

When I look upon to the tombs of the great, every emotion of envy dies in me; when I read the epitaphs of the beautiful, every mordinate desire goes out; when I meet with the grief of parents upon a tombstone, my heart melts with compassion; when I see the tomb of the parents in the variety of grieving for those whom we must quickly follow

They had played together in infancy, they had worked together in manhood, they were now toffering about and gossiping away the evening of life; and in a short time they will provide to self-crops the soul bounds of inchests.

She showed Solomon two garlands of flowers. She had one in the right hand and the other in the left. One garland was real and the other artificial "Can you say which garland is real and which attificial?" she asked. The courtiers were puzzled. Both the garlands looked the same Solomon could not say a word. The Queen felt triumplant. She thought Solomon would not be able to solve the puzzle.

Solomon soon ordered that the windows should be opened. A number of bees flew into the half from the garden. They buzzed about the Queen and settled on the garland in the right hand. "The flowers in the right hand are real," said Solomon, "and the others artificial." The Queen was are the analysis of with the wind, in Just then a spider dropped from the eating. It was hanging by a silken thread. I wondered how it would be able to reach its web, which was a long way up. It began to crawl up the thread, but fell nearly to the ground. Again it tried to reach the eating and again it fell down. The spider did not seem ruffled. Again it crawled up and managed to go a little higher but fell again. It tried over and again with determination. It made nine vain attempts to reach its web. I thought it would no longer strive to climb But to my surprise, it did try again. It was only a footfrom its web. Slowly and steadily, it got higher and higher and at last jumped into the web.

"Bravo!" I eried out. "The spider did not give up in spite of repeated failures, and at last succeeded. I'd better try again."

20. My Envourite Hobbies

When we have worked continuously for some one we need relaxation. To pursue hobbies is the best way of relaxing. My favourite hobbies is a pud my stamp collecting and photography.

I have loved gardening since my boyhood. I enjoy water he my partient every morning and evening. If gives me enough physical exercise and sends me back to my work with renewed zest and vigour. It is very aim using date the ap-fresh beds for new plants. I grow flowers as well as vegetables. I beam with satisfaction when I cast my eyes on my luxuriant garden. The sight of the live via adent is the reasonable refree up.

My second hobby is stamp-collecting. I have a the red has heefs of samps. I have arranged them in five books. My uncle, who often goes abroad on business, has been helping me to collect the stamps. He sends me foreign stamps from the places he visits. Whenever I have a little leisure, I sit down at a table with my precious stamp-books, arranging new stamps in them and writing in the nances of countries. Each samp has a story to tell me of distant lands and strange peoples. Looking through the stamps, I can follow the history of nations.

I also love photography. Whenever I go for a picnic or on an excursion or travel round a strange place. I take my camera with me and snap intersting objects. I have a transper of vaporable straps shots, some of them highly recreational.

That has been an important day in my life—a day which I can never forget. Whenever I see that book, it takes me back to the memorable day. I have read the book several times and every time I read it, it drives home H W Longfellow's well-known lines "Lives of great men all remind us we can make our lives sublime......."

Science has been making great strides particularly for the last five or six decades. Man has worked miracles in the field of science and there seems to be nothing that he cannot achieve

I was left in that pit for nine days. I had nothing to eat. I grew terribly weak and, if I had remained there in that condition for two or three I... I have taken out of the pit and brought into a town. I was gradually tamed

My master treats me with kindness. He never neglects to meet my needs. He provides me with plenty of leaves, grass, mots and bulbs to eat. I belp him in many ways. I carry huge loads for him. I pile timber. Sometimes he leads me to himtsmen. Hunsmen sit on my back and drive to the spots where they can find tigers and fire at them. Once I was lent to a Maharija. That day I was painted with bright colours and covered with silk and velvet clothes. I was used in a state procession. With the Maharija on my back I walked with an art of proud majesty.

I enjoy myself very much when I am led into a tank for my bath. I draw up water by my trunk and skirt it all over my body like a shower bath

I am pleased you have told the truth
Isn't drinking an evil?

I don't think so—if one doesn't drink in excess. On the contrary, I consider it a joby social custom. It would be discourteous and unsocial not to comply when my friends invite me to join them in revelry. It makes me lively and happy after the day's attenuous work. It revives me when I in a limit of the lively and happy after the day's attenuous work. It revives me when I in a limit of the lively and happy after the day's attenuous work. #### THE APPRECIATION OF POETRY

EXERCISE 163

1. (a) The poet condemns the kind of life full of care, which allows us no time to enjoy the beauty of nature.

- (b) The 'stars' are the flowers that have dropped into the stream from the plants growing on the bank.
- This is Personification. 'Beauty' is represented as a person.
- (d) A glance at a beautiful object gives us delight. If we continue to look at it, the delight redoubles, the personification employed above is continued in these lines. The poet speaks of the hectic life which allows us no time to stop for a while to experience intense delight when we see a beautiful object.
- 2 (a) The poet regards great books as friends who can always be relied upon. Their company delights him. They provide solace when he is in misery. He feels that he is greatly indebted to them.
  - (b) They are the books which contain the minds of the great.
  - (c) The poet's friends are the books. They can never part from him. They have been and will be helpful to him all his
  - (d) The poet has often shed tears in gratitude for the books, which have been of great help to him.
- We should not think that whatever we have done or said is past and that we need not be concerned about it. Our actions and words have to be accounted for on the Day of Judgement.
  - (b) The seeds which we scatter carelessly grow to be plants or trees and the seeds yielded by these plants or trees grow to be plants or trees in turn, and so on. So also the effect of our actions will remain for ever. The effects of our bad actions are compared to weeds and those of our good actions to beneficial plants.

- (e) We act and speak carelessly. We hale know that our actions and words will last and have to be answered for on the Day of Judgement.
- (d) On the Day of Judgement we meet the dreadful consequences of our actions.
- 4. (a) The poet sees sweet content in high and low ranks. He finds it in some quier place.
  - (h) (i) Moths are spoken of as kissing their shadows on the lighted ceiling as they dance
    - (ii) Heaven's bright face is represented as twitching with the innumerable Stars.
  - (c) (i) "Blink with the blind bats" wings": Here three words ("blink", "blind", "bat") begin with the same letter. This is Alliteration.
    - "heaven's bright face...... thousands there" : Heaven is personifred. This is Personification.
    - 'Content'.
- 5. (a) Keats had read widely in English literature, particularly poetry.
  - Homer is profound and difficult to understand.
  - (c) On reading Chapman's translation of Hard, Keats felt like an astronomer when he discovers a new planet, or like Coretz when he stared at the Pacific with the cagle's eyes.
  - (d) "Much have I travelled in the realms of gold"
  - (e) "Pure serene" ; spendid thoughts contained in Homer's work. "cagle eyes" : eyes as keen as an eagle's.

"wild surmise": thoughtfulness tinged with excitement.

PARAPHRASING

EXERCISE 164

1. Some people complain when they encounter a small misfortune in the course of their thoroughly happy life. On the other hand, there are some who feel quite satisfied and are grateful to God for His mercy if they come upon a small piece of good for-their miserable life.

- If we study the lives of great men we are reminded that we too can achieve greatness and, when we die, leave behind us footmarks so that in future somebody who is desolate like a shipwrecked sailor may, on seeing our footmarks, have guidance and be infused with new life.
- More things can be accomplished by prayer than people imagine. Let your voice of prayer, therefore, rise from the depth of your heart for me, like a fountain coming up from the bosom of the earth. If men, who have knowledge of God, do not lift their hands in prayer for themselves and for their friends, they are no better than sheep or goats, which are devoid of intellect.
- This world is full of miseries. None can find here perfect happiness. Happiness, if it is found, is accompained by sorrow. It seems to be wise, and may not be an offence against the law of love, to compare our lot with the lot of those who are less fortunate, so that we may put up with our moderate misfortunes and sympathise with others who are more miserable.
- God, whatever the place of our birth, our language, or our complexion. Even after death we shall not be divided according to our language, colour, nationality or country. Our common Father, to whom we owe our life and activity, is our impartial judge, to whom distinctions of race, colour or languages have no meaning whatever. He will judge us strictly according to our actions, good or bad, which he will assess with the ulmost impartiality.
- There once stood a school in that spot

- fenced with gorse that puts forth beautiful flowers, which there are none to enjoy. The schoolmaster, who taught in that noisy building, was a strict disciplinarian. He was fearful to look at. All truents including the writer had experience of his stemness. Every morning, looking at their teacher's face. the trembling pupils used to forebode the misfortunes which the day had in store for them. He often cracked jokes and, whenever he did, they laughed with pretended joy. When he frowned, the terrible news was conveyed from one boy to another through whispers and circulated all around. Nevertheless, he was good-natured. If he was severe, it was because he was keen that his pupils should learn well.
- Weakness is praiseworthy. The man who is not moved by that scene is stone-hearted and incapable of being moved by anything. The wall on which we carved our names still visible; the bench on which we sat while fully occupied in reading, though it is damaged; the young children with their buttons unfastened, playing the same games on the same spot; all these are delighful to look at and call back to the mind our childhood pleasures. We seem almost to be sweet innocent children again.
- Human activities are made up of trifles and half of our misery is due to our failings. The real joy in life is derived from peace and ease. Only a very small number of men can save or serve their fellowmen, but it is possible for all men to be amiable. Every rude person should realize that a small act of unkindness causes great pain. We may not find ourselves able to bestow plential gifts on others, but it is quite possible to restrain ourselves from offending them. We may not be able to give them large quantities of wealth, to favour them with high positions, or to give them perfect health. But we are endowed with the capability to console those who are in distress, pardon another for doing wrong, and resist taunts. God has ordained that happiness in life shall depend on these factors and misfortunes vanish when one has a true friend.

Now came quiet Evening. Twilight enveloped everything in grey light. There was silence. Beasts retired to their beds of grass and birds to their nests. The nightingale, which was awake, sang her fove-song throughout the night. Her song was so engaging that silence did not mind being disturbed. The sky, covered with stars, looked as if it was adorned with sapphires.

from behind a cloud in her queenly majesty and revealed her matchless splendour so that the world was enveloped in silver light. If a person suffers misery as a result of his virtue, he deserves reverence. If his misery is due to some ill luck, he deserves sympathy. If it is due to vice he ought not to be affronted because his misery itself is perhaps a punishment proportional to his evil conduct. The nature of the man who censures a criminal about to be executed is not worthy of praise.
